

Carefrontation

Carefrontation is a distinct move away from the old model of "Confrontation" that defined and stigmatized the process of intervention for a long time. The old model of interventions advocated the use of shame to break down an individual and often left both the addict/alcoholic and the intervention team participants with deep emotional scars.

Carefrontation is different. It is a clinical framework that is presented in the spirit of love, care and concern. The model operates under the understanding that addiction is a disease and assigns any negative behaviors discussed throughout the intervention process to the disease, not the person.

Carefrontation creates a safe and supportive environment for the start of the healing process for all intervention team members, not just the addict/alcoholic, by opening up healthy communications for the entire family system and establishing a solid foundation to educating everyone involved.
